

The following document describes the new user registration process for the CCRC web site. This process is exactly like the process you use to make an account on most web sites today, for example rcuniverse.com .The web site is located at <http://www.chestercountyrc.com> . Many of the screens are available to the general public. There are additional screens that can only be accessed by club members. To be a registered club member on the web site, you must first become a registered user by following these instructions:

Use your favorite internet browser to navigate to the club's official web site - <http://www.chestercountyrc.com> . You will see a Login area at the top left.

Your web browser will launch if it is not already open, and will display the following message, indicating that your new registration has been activated. Again, if you have popup blockers, or software firewalls in place, it is possible for the registration process to be halted at any time.

The page should refresh with the site login page displayed. Use your new username and password to login.

By default, on your first login, you will be sent to the profile page, where you can fill out more information about yourself. This is optional.

Once you are registered, you must be added to the security group for club members. This is done by sending an email to the webmaster at webmaster@chestercountyrc.com. Indicate in your email that you are a club member and specify your new username. After your membership has been verified, you will be added to the member security group and will have access to the Members' Area. The webmaster also receives notices when a new user registers. If the email address that the new user registered with is on the list of known club members, the webmaster will automatically add that user to the member security group. The site is checked often for new members and upload approvals.
